

The Mining Archive is a state-of-the-art climate-controlled facility...

built and dedicated in 2012 to house rare and one-of-a-kind collections including the original operating documents of the famous Kennedy Gold Mine located in the Mother Lode.

These papers have a great value to both historians and genealogists alike, and encompass the history of the mining industry in Amador County, California.

The Archive is currently in the process of digitizing its' holdings.

Historic Documents in the Collection:

Holdings include many of the records of the Kennedy Mine from 1886 through 1942, the 56 years of continuous operation by the last company to own the mine..

These records are a "Gold Mine" for genealogists who may have an ancestor that worked at the mine. They include many hundreds of personnel records and even original signatures.

There are a few records of operation of the mine prior to 1886, and perhaps extending back to the 1860s.

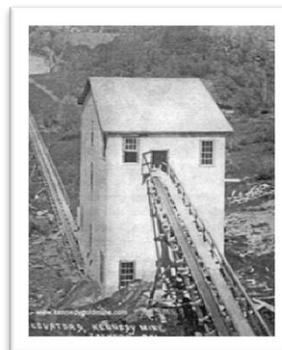

The Kennedy Mine Archive also has documents and pictures relating to the mine after it was no longer in operation, from 1942 to the present.

Finally, there are records from other local mines (including the Argonaut, the Central Eureka and Zeila), texts, maps of the Mother Lode, and other Mother-Lode and mining related documents.

The following document types are available:

- Payroll ledgers
- Applications
- Accident reports
- California Insurance Fund records
- Maps
- Check stubs
- Copies of letters from the Superintendent
- Operation records
- Photographs
